Fear is the thief of dreams.

I sincerely thank all those who worked so hard to bring this project to life. The late Dennis Balchin spent countless hours teaching me the craft of coaxing aluminum into art. Jeremy Call is a dedicated and extremely knowledgeable employee who helped tremendously with troubleshooting and suspension set-up of the car. Jeremy Peterson is an exceptional welder. He was also critical to the final assembly and inspection of all the thousands of bolts in the car. Stephen Kirkham gave vital advice and editing to the book. Many other dedicated employees here in Utah spent hundreds of hours polishing, deburring, and cleaning parts. I am most grateful to the wonderful craftsmen at our factory in Poland who are so talented in sculpting aluminum into unbelievable shapes.

Desire Wilson and the drivers at Miller Motorsports Park gave important technical advice and feedback with on-track vehicle handling during testing. Kenny Hill's unequalled mastery of high-performance materials, alloy selection, and heat-treating specifications gave me a glimpse of a new, rarified world in materials science and metallurgy few have ever seen.

Mary Kirkham has traveled to Poland with me many times to help take care of our business while I chase my dreams. Some of my earliest memories are of handing wrenches to my father, Thomas Kirkham Sr., as he worked on our family vehicles. He instilled in me a love of automobiles and taught me the value of hard work. I am most grateful to my wife, Alisa Kirkham, who spent many lonely nights while I was away working on this car and book. Her work was indispensable with the layout and graphic design you see here.

Finally, I am most grateful to Larry Ellison for the complete freedom he gave Kirkham Motorsports to build our dream.
